The pastures are drying up pretty badly; if this hot weather and strong winds prevail much longer people will be feeding their stock.

This torrid sun, this torrid sun, which melts our crop away, but only for the glorious sun, where'd come the light of day. Our vegetables are sure becoming scarce and it is high time to be preparing them for winter. We tried a new way to can beans last year. Just prepare them as you would to cook, fill a tub or some large vessel with freshly drawn water and put cans and beans under the water and fill them while they are completely covered with water (have rubber on can before it is placed in water) and screw the top on while still under water. They keep as well as the ones we heated.

Our kranit also was much better which we canned in fruit jars. Cut the cabbage ready, salt as if you were going to cook them; then, by putting a small amount in the can and pounding it down solid with a piece of broom stick or small stick, you will be surprised at the amount of cabbage one can will hold, and it keeps perfectly, too. There will be a little fermenting, but you will just leave it sealed.

An easy way to make cucumber pickle is to place one quart of sorghum in a 3 gallon jar, and put the fresh cucumbers in the jar, not too many at a time, and place a light weight on them. By putting the fresh cucumbers in every day; the syrup will cover them, and, when winter comes, your pickles are made and much better than the other way.

Mrs. Robert Imhoff copies a part of a letter in which her sister, Mrs. Roy Cox, of Eldorado, Kas., formerly of near Norwood, quotes some prices: "What do suppose it costs to have teeth made these days? He wants $150 for the upper ones. The cheapest I can get is $75. Green beans are 20c a pound. It costs $1.50 for beans, meat to season them, potatoes and one cucumber for the meal. Can get small plums for 18c a pound. Blackberries and cherries are 20c for a pint box, not full; small apples, 20c a pound; tiny roasting ears, 50c a dozen. A small Leghorn chicken, no bigger than a quail, sells for $1. They charge as long as they can hold their breath. Byron is first lieutenant and he is all puffed up because he dined with Gov. Capper."

Last week's items.

We are very sorry to see the corn burning up under this torrid sun, yet it must be so.

By Attorney E. R. Shipp

Halt! Lift up your eyes—salute that star!

It tells that a man has gone to war;

It tells of a mother's love and tears

It tells of a father's hope—his fears;

It tells of a sister's broken heart,

It tells of a brother doing his part;

It tells of a sweetheart's sacrifice,

It tells of Hell—and of Paradise;

It tells that a man has gone to war.

Halt! Lift up your eyes—salute that star!
